

Manufacturing INDUSTRIES

OVERVIEW

Smith Anderson attorneys understand the complex business and legal challenges that manufacturers face, and regularly provide counsel to manufacturers and distributors of industrial materials, semiconductors, consumer goods, automobiles, foods, beverages, pharmaceuticals, agricultural and biotech products, and an array of other goods. Our manufacturing and distribution clients range from businesses focused on local markets here in North Carolina and throughout the Southeast, to those with national and international interests.

We regularly counsel manufacturing companies on ordinary course business transactions, “bet the company” matters, and everything in between. From supply chain and real estate contracts to asset-based lending to collaborative licensing agreements to mergers and acquisitions to product liability risk management and litigation, Smith Anderson offers our manufacturing clients vast experience and a deep bench of support for a wide range of transactional, litigation and other legal needs.

Our attorneys who advise manufacturers comprise experience from a cross-section of practice areas and work as cohesive teams and groups to support the needs of our manufacturing clients. Each of our manufacturing clients is unique, and our desire is to first learn about each client’s business and its specific opportunities and challenges. With that knowledge, we then provide practical, solutions-driven advice to help our manufacturing clients grow their businesses and manage the risks attendant to competing in today’s economy.
